CHARTERS

On October thirty-first, seventeen hundred and fifty-four, in the twenty-eighth year of the reign of George the Second, a royal charter was granted by Letters Patent to the Governors of the College of the Province of New York, in the City of New York, in America, creating them a Body Corporate to erect and maintain a college to be known as King's College for the Instruction and Education of Youth in the Learned Languages and Liberal Arts and Sciences; with power to elect their successors, to hold property, to appoint a president, fellows, professors and tutors, and to confer degrees.

This charter remained in force until May 1, 1784, when the Legislature at its first session after the adoption of the Constitution of the State of New York, passed an act entitled "An Act for granting certain privileges to the college heretofore called King's College, for altering the name and charter thereof, and erecting an university within this state."

By the terms of this act the franchises and property of the Governors of King's College were vested in a corporation styled the Regents of the University of the State of New York, who were thereby empowered to appoint a president and professors and to make ordinances for the government of King's College, the name of which was changed to Columbia College, and of such other colleges as they should found, composing the University.

This act was repealed by "An Act to institute an university within this state and for other purposes therein mentioned," which was passed April 13, 1787, largely through the efforts of Alexander Hamilton, then a member of the Legislature, and a Regent of the University. By the terms of the repealing act the original charter granted to the Governors of King's College was amended, ratified and confirmed, and the franchises and property formerly enjoyed by the Governors of King's College were vested in the Trustees of Columbia College in the City of New York, who were named in the act and declared and constituted trustees of Columbia College, in perpetual succession, according to the true intent and meaning of said charter.

On March 23, 1810, the original charter was further amended by the following act:

AN ACT RELATIVE TO COLUMBIA COLLEGE IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

[Laws of 1810—Chapter 85.]
